fight hard for each of them. During the course of this set McLoughlin made five Bervice aces, more than half of his total for the match. In the second set the national champions played fast tennis and moved into a lead before their adversaries got going, at 4—2. They were still ahead at 5—3 and seemed to have the set well hand when Pell and Behr started to how some good teamwork and surprised ne onlookers by pulling up to even terms.

the onlookers by pulling up to even terms, making the set deuce at 5 all.

There were few in the large crowd gathered around the court who did not look for a breakdown in some of the players, for the heat had been oppressive all through the match. The players poured a little water ever their heads and went back to finish the set, McLoughlin and Bundy winning it when they bagged the last two games easily.

There had been some talk of cutting the match to two vantage sets out of five on account of the sultry weather, but all of the men reported in good condition, and fit for the longer route. They did not even stop to rest after the second set, but went right on to the third. This time it was the West Side Tennis Club racket wielders who got off with a rush, and they forged to the front at 4—2. During these first six games McLoughlin took things easy, and allowed Bundy to cover more court. This probably accounted in a great measure for the lead of the New Yorkers, although of twas in this set that Pell started to do good work.

McLoughlen had evidently taken enough rest in the early games, for he worked hard and mainly by his brilliancy the Western pair gathered in a brace of games which squared the set. The Californians worked hard to gain the next game and made a good start for it by getting the lead at 40.0 on Behr's service. A net by Bandy and two placement drives by Peil brought the game to deuce and the invaders finally lost it.

had the score at 30-0 when he made tour errors in a row, giving his adversaries the game and set.

Immediately after the last point of the set was made the players trotted off to the clubhouse, where they took a shower and rested for ten minutes. Before they came back on the grass to renew the conflict the period of respite evidently gave the Westerners their second wind, for they played faster tennis than ever and soon gained a lead of second wind, for they played laster tenns than ever and soon gained a lead of four games to two.

The teams divided the next two, and with Peil serving, the Californians needed only one game for the match. They made the score 30—0, bringing the marsin that separated them from victory down to two points. Once again the New Yorkers braced and won the game. Even then the task of the middle States champions, seemed hopeless, for with their adversaries leading at 5—4, it was McLoughlin's turn to serve. The star of last year's Davis cup had lost only once on his service, then only at the beginning of the match, and he had finished the second set on his service when his team needed only one.

that the match was as good as over and many started to leave the stands, when Pell and Behr did the unexpected, breaking through the champion's meteoric ser-vice and winning with the loss of only one point, thereby bringing the set to deuce. Deuce was called twice again, but the New Yorkers finished strong, taking the last two games, while the national title holders gathered in a lone point on a placement by McLoughlin. When the West Siders succeeded in winning on Mc-Loughlin's service all those who had started to leave the stands quickly rushed back, seeking places of vantage, and when the supposedly weaker team eventually succeeded in carrying off the set and thereby squaring the match the big crowd went wild.

After the great burst of applause the silence that fell over the crowd as the players started the fifth set was so intense that one might easily have heard the proverbial-pin drop. If any of the men were tired they did not show it. As a matter of fact each one seemed anxious to cover the other's court as well as his own. Nothwithstanding the strain on the players there was no lack of team work on either side and all four played more carefully than they had at any other time during the match. This last set was a bitter battle before the champions finally bitter battle before the champions finally go of team work in his desire to make sure, from his viewpoint, of every stroke that was made. His play was even more scintillant than it had been in any of natch compared favorably with Mc-oughlin's. The national champions proved the better starters in the final set and they moved to the front at 3—1. Pell and Behr made their last stand at this point and succeeded in catching their opponents and passing them at 5—4.

McLoughlin evidently had visions of the match slipping away from him and his team mate if he did not take a little more of the labor upon his own shoulders. Fitting the action to the visions he proceeded to encroach upon Bundy's territory and as a result the Westerners car-ried off three games in a row and with ried off three games in a row and with them the set and the match.

During the last five games of this set the match resolved itself into a duel between Behr and McLoughlin. Both of these men made remarkable strides throughout this period and elicited applause from the gallery for many acrobatic gets. Although Pell played remarkably well to-day, Williams is still markably well to-day. Williams is still the favorite in the challenge round match to-morrow for the Achelis cup. Play will begin at 3 o'clock, best three out of five sets winning. The summaries:

managed to break through his armor, for a run in the seventh and tie the score. Singles by Bescher and Doyle, a long fly by Burns and an infield out accounted for the run. Poor base running by the Pirates, whose game is not sufficiently varied or alert to be a winning one, handleapped them. Meyers picked a somnolent runner off third in the sixth inning. Doyle killed a base hit on Koney in the eighth, making the second out. Jim Kelly followed with a triple, but Matty turned on the fadeaway and struck out Carey.

BRESNAHAN GOING TO FEDS!

Chicago Hears Rumor That He Will Replace Miner Brown.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Roger Bresnahan is slated for the management of the St. Louis Federal League Club. This rumor Louis Federal League Club. This runcy was circulated here to-day and not denied. The hard to handle Bresnahan is said to be jumping at the chance made possible in his eyes by the Court of Appeals decision in the Chief Johnson injunction case, which practically renders void the ten day release clause in base-ball contractis. Boger has a grievance against the management here, or thinks he has. For that matter the former Giant-Cardina player might properly be appointed chair man of the grievance committee. He also ways did have a chip on his shoulder.

Miner Brown is to retire to the ranks and may be transferred to another club. Brooklyn is said to be will to take the three fingered twirler

Milan, Injured, to Be Out a Month.
